The Langdyke Countryside Trust works to promote the conservation, protection and enhancement of the biodiversity, landscape, natural and cultural heritage of the rural areas north and west of Peterborough, for the benefit of local people, wildlife and visitors.

Founded in 1999, Langdyke now manages seven nature reserves – a total of 180 acres of land – has more than 200 household members and its own flock of sheep! Over the years we have planted hedges and trees, restored wild flower meadows, built tern rafts, created ponds and an orchard. We organise weekly work-parties for members and monthly nature walks, regular talks and family days, helping people to understand, value and get involved with the natural and cultural heritage.

We are a purely voluntary organisation committed to making a difference to our local countryside.

How to access the reserves:

Details of access arrangements for our reserves can be found on our website at www.langdyke.org.uk The Trust also works closely with Natural England and the Wildlife Trusts and helps manage the national nature reserves at Barnack Hills and Holes and Castor Hanglands.
